Statement of George Landrith, president of Frontiers of Freedom, released on December 10, 2013:

We support the announced bipartisan agreements on both the FCC Process Reform Act and the Federal Spectrum Incentive Act.

We believe transparency and predictability are important and necessary elements of any successful legal and regulatory structure. The recently announced bipartisan FCC Process Reform Act will provide greater transparency and predictability to the FCC.

We also believe that with more and more wireless devices and wireless communications and the importance of such technology to a growing, modern economy, the government must facilitate airwave spectrum moving from inefficient usage (or non-usage) to its most useful and efficient use. The recently announced bipartisan Federal Spectrum Incentive Act will provide greater incentives to use government spectrum efficiently and allow more spectrum to be used in innovative and expanding technologies.

Without transparency and predictability, the marketplace cannot operate as smoothly or efficiently. Innovation becomes more difficult and is hampered. Likewise, without ways of encouraging efficient use of government spectrum, a valuable resource will be wasted and effectively lost. Thus, we believe both the FCC Process Reform Act and the Federal Spectrum Incentive Act provide needed solutions, reforms and improvements which will facilitate further technological advances.
